Actions to Stop Doing In the Future

- Not communicating as often - Communication over the entire project had been a bit spotty. We spoke after class, giving a brief overview of what we had been doing. We would like to improve in this area.
 - We have gotten better, but we can improve more on this
- Not using the scrum board efficiently - The scrum board should help us determine what needs to be done and who is working on what so we don't step on each other's toes as much.
- Explain our code more - Occasionally the back end and front end would be confused by the other's code while trying to tie information together so more communication would be better.

Actions to Keep Doing Next Time

- Coding Sessions - The most work that we did this sprint was in group meetings. It was very helpful to work together in person. We should strive to have more of these in the coming sprints.
- Flexibility - Being flexible with one another and making sure changing tasks or coding together was easy. It allowed for a stress free team environment.
- Not being afraid to ask for help - If anyone was stuck we helped each other out and it made for a nice and helpful environment.
- Using group messaging - Slack was a really helpful tool and managed to keep us all on the same page when we did not have the chance to meet in person.

Work completion rate

Two of the three user stories were completed this sprint, resulting in around 30 hours of work. We had estimated 34. This included wrapping up and tying everything together while debugging.
